

Terms of Use

General

The Justice and Artificial Intelligence Tracker (the “Platform”) is a research project built and owned by the Evidence for Justice Lab (named as the “Platform Sponsor”). The Platform Sponsor created an online platform, which provides access to: (i) data, information, analysis, visualizations, and other content produced by the Platform Sponsor; and (ii) documents, reports, news articles, agency materials, vendor materials, and other content that is publicly available (as of the time they are collected) or otherwise independently provided by third parties (collectively, the “Information”).

The Platform is a research and public information resource. It is not authorized to carry on any regulated activity in any jurisdiction, and nothing on the Platform is intended to create any legal, contractual, or fiduciary relationship with any user. By accessing or using the Platform, you agree to these Terms of Use.

Purpose and Limitations

The Platform sources publicly available information on where and how artificial intelligence and related automated technologies are being piloted, tested, procured, or deployed by law enforcement, court, and correction agencies in the United States. It is intended as a resource for policymakers, researchers, journalists, technologists, community advocates, educators, students, and members of the public.

The Platform reflects a snapshot of a rapidly changing landscape and is drawn primarily from public sources. The absence of an agency, jurisdiction, technology, or vendor from the Platform does not mean that the agency or jurisdiction is not using such technology; the presence of an entry does not mean that the technology is currently in use, in use as originally described, or in use lawfully. Entries may reflect pilots, procurements, or deployments that have since been modified, discontinued, or never fully implemented.

Advice

None of the Information contained or featured on the website should be deemed to constitute the provision of legal, financial, investment, or other professional advice in any way.

None of the Information (including but not limited to any language found in featured articles, terms and conditions, or disclosure documents) shall form the basis of or be relied on in connection with any litigation, policy adoption, procurement contract, commitment, financial, or legal decision whatsoever. The Platform does not make, and should not be read as making, any determination about whether any agency, vendor, product, or practice is lawful, constitutional, effective, appropriate, or otherwise permissible under any applicable law, policy, or standard.

Users who wish to act on matters addressed by the Platform should independently verify the underlying facts with original sources and consult their own qualified legal, policy, or technical advisors.
